LETTER III. from the National Merchant.

SIR,

THAT ſome Branches of Trade may be advantageous to a Country, and others detrimental; and, that ſome may be more, or leſs ſo, than others, I ſuppoſe are not Queſtions in Diſpute: But to know how rightly to diſtinguiſh each from another, perhaps, is not ſo well underſtood, as ſome may imagine. We will therefore ſee what Rules are to be found to govern and direct us in theſe Matters.

X. ALL ſuch Trades as, in their Nature, tend to promote and anſwer the true End of a State or Government (viz. the Defence, Happineſs and Increaſe of its People) are advantageous, and to be encouraged: And, on the contrary, ſuch Trades, as do not tend towards the ſame End, are diſadvantageous, and not to be allowed of.

XI. SOME Trades, conſidered by themſelves, may be look'd on as advantageous to a Nation; but, when compared with others, will be found to be really detrimental; inaſmuch as the Good they do will not countervail the Prejudices they occaſion: Therefore ſuch Trades are to be deemed diſadvantageous; and if they cannot be regulated, ought to be aboliſhed.

XII. THERE are ſome Trades, the immediate Profits and Advantages whereof may be vaſtly greater than thoſe of others; yet the latter may be more valuable, and more worthy of publick Care and Protection, than the former.—Our Trades with Spain, and our American Colonies, may ſerve to explain this Truth; for ſhould we admit the firſt to be more profitable, we ought at the ſame time to acknowledge, that we hold it but at the Diſcretion or Caprice of another; that it is precarious and uncertain, and more likely to alter for the worſe, than in a way of being improved for the better: On the other Hand, our Colonies are our own, very improveable, ſubject to our own Laws and Regulations, and the more they are improved, the more improveable they will become: In ſhort, the Advantages we receive from our Colonies are of a Nature more certain, more durable; and, if they are not at preſent, may ſoon be rendered more profitable to Great Britain than any other Commerce whatever. — Not that I would depreciate any one Branch of our Trade: My Deſign in this Place being only, firmly to eſtabliſh this 11th Maxim, viz. 'That there are ſome Trades, the immediate Profits and Advantages whereof may be vaſtly greater, than thoſe of others; and yet, that the latter, may be more valuable, and more worthy of publick Care and Protection than the former:' —— And I thought I could not do it by a more pertinent Inſtance than I have choſen. —— When I come hereafter to diſcourſe of any particular Trade, or Commerce, I ſhall be ſure to obſerve the Rules of Truth and Juſtice; and not forget to ſhew the Gentlemen concerned in every of them, a due Reſpect. —— I own, however, I always look on the Britiſh Plantations with an inexpreſſible Pleaſure; Providence having allotted thoſe Lands for us, our Children, and Children's Children, in ſuch an abundant Manner, that, in this reſpect, Britons may truly ſay, there is no End of the Goodneſs of God: And were but half the ſame Zeal and Charity exerted in providing for our Young, and employing our idle People, as hath been beſtowed on building and Endowing of Hoſpitals, Spittals, and Alms-Houſes for the Infirm and the Diſeaſed; in a few Years, we ſhould not have left many Objects of the latter Sort to exerciſe our Charity on; which is a thing ardently to be deſired. The honeſt Phyſician ſays, his firſt Care is to prevent Diſtempers; the next to remove them; and, theſe failing, then to give Eaſe. —That Nation that relieves the Diſeaſed and Infirm, certainly does well; but that which provides for, and employs its Poor and its Young, perhaps does better. —— Both ought to be done; yet that which does the latter, will prevent in a great meaſure, for the future, the Neceſſity of the former. —— And further; 'Colonies are the Seeds of Nations, begun and nouriſhed by the Care of wiſe and populous Countries, for the Increaſe of Human Stock and Benefit of Commerce; and ſome of the wiſeſt Men in Hiſtory have juſtly taken their Fame from this Deſign and Service.'

I WILL conclude this Paper, in the Words of a very worthy Writer in the Year 1696 (who, I think, was then one of King William's Commiſſioners for Trade and Plantations) with only ſome little Alteration. 'Matters of Trade are Subjects of ſo much Nicety, 'that few agree in Notions relating to them; and yet 'of ſo much Importance, that nothing can more conduce to the enriching of the Nation, than that they 'ſhould be ſettled on the moſt advantageous and laſting Foundations, agreeable to the Rules of Prudence, 'Honour and Juſtice: Therefore it is hoped, that 'they that have more Ability, will correct the Matter, 'without endeavouring to correct the Author; who 'aims only at the Publick Service, without any Deſign 'againſt Men's particular Intereſts; further than as 'ſuch Intereſts appear deſtructive of the common 'Good: For, if we could agree what is our true Intereſt in reference to the Publick, and to ſacrifice our 'Paſſions and private Intereſts thereto, then by God's 'Bleſſing on our Endeavours, we may hope for Succeſs 'in our Trade; but if, inſtead thereof, we ſhould continue wallowing in Luxury, and ſcrambling who 'ſhall get moſt one from another, it may be feared, 'we ſhall endanger the Loſs of All, and juſtly incur 'the Sentence pronounced by the wiſe Man, He that 'is in Love with his Folly ſhall periſh in it.'

I am, SIR,

Laſt Night came in the Mail due from Holland.

Warſaw, July 13.

THE two following Pieces are current here, the one being a Letter from the Primate to the King, dated the 4th Inſtant at Lowicz; and the other his Majeſty's Anſwer.

SIRE,

'The Inſtances which your Majeſty has been pleaſed 'to make in my Favour to her Imperial Majeſty of 'Ruſſia, which have procured me the Liberty I now 'enjoy, do not only demand of me the utmoſt Gratitude for ſuch great Goodneſs, but alſo that I ſhould 'not make one Moment's Delay in returning you my 'moſt humble Thanks; aſſuring your Majeſty at the 'ſame time, that all the Uſe I propoſe to make of 'this Liberty, is, firſt, to do what lies in my Power 'for procuring Peace and Tranquillity to my Country, in order to the reſtoring an Union and Confidence among the People; and that the next Thing 'I have in View, is his Majeſty's Service, for whom 'I ſhall, to my laſt Breath, retain the ſincereſt, the 'profoundeſt, and the moſt inviolable Reſpect, according to the Sentiments with which I have the Honour to be, &c.'

The King's Anſwer.

My Lord Primate,

'I was glad to find by your Letter of the 4th Inſt. 'that my Interceſſion with the Empreſs of Ruſſia had 'ſuch an Effect, and to hear that you have your Liberty; and am pleaſed with your Expreſſions of Affection and Gratitude to my Perſon. I wiſh to ſee 'you forthwith at my Court, not doubting but you 'will readily aſſiſt me with your Knowledge and your 'Credit, for attaining ſo deſirable an End, as the 'ſpeedy and ſolid Pacification of my Kingdom.

'I ſhall, with Pleaſure, embrace all Opportunities 'to give you Marks of my Affection and Eſteem: 'And I pray God to take you, my Lord Primate, into 'his holy Protection.'

Sign'd

Done at Warſaw, July 8. 1735. AUGUSTUS REX.

The Primate, who is expected here every Moment, will be accompanied by a conſiderable Train, ſeveral Senators being gone out of Town to meet him. The Ceremony of his Audience has been ſettled in the following Manner: As ſoon as he arrives, he is to ſend one of his chief Eccleſiaſticks to give Notice of it to the King, who, at the ſame time, will appoint the Hour of his Audience. When he is conducted to it, the Bazziers will be opened for his Coach, and he will be received at the Gate by two Gentlemen of the Bed-chamber, who will conduct him to the Stair-caſe, where he is to be received by two Chamberlains, who are to preſent him to the Grand Marſhal of the Crown at the Head of the Stairs, that he may conduct him into the King's Apartment. After the Audience he is to be re-conducted with the ſame Formalities. On the 1ſt Inſtant the Count de Munich ſent ſome Ruſſian Officers, with a Detchment of Soldiers, to the Convent of Neuſtadt, from whence they brought off two Friars to his Houſe, who are charged with having talked with too much Freedom of the preſent State of Affairs.

Vienna, July 13. The Court has received Advice, that the Elector of Bavaria has, purſuant to the Emperor's Requeſt, granted Paſſage for the Ruſſian Troops thro' his Dominions, on condition that they commit no Diſorder therein; that they pay ready Money for what they have, and that they only paſs by a Regiment at a Time, &c. The Bavarian Miniſter, the Baron de Mormin, has alſo had a particular Audience lately of the Emperor, after which he ſent a Courier to Munich; and a Report goes now of a Match on foot betwixt the Electoral Prince and the Emperor's ſecond Daughter. Several of Count Konigſegg's Regiments of Horſe are drawing off towards Auſtria for better Accommodation, till they are again employ'd. His Infantry is quarter'd about Monte-Baldo, Roveredo, Riva, Borgetto and Alla. The News of Count Konigſegg's Arrival here, was too haſty.

Franckfort, July 21. Upon Advice that 2000 French of the Gariſon of Triers had paſſed the Rhine at Unckle below Coblentz, and were march'd towards Weſterwald, in order to carry off Hoſtages for Contributions; a great Body of Troops is ſent from the Rhingau to cut off their Retreat; of which Expedition we are impatient to know the Event.

The other Letters from the Rhine, as well as thoſe from Italy, bring nothing material from the Armies, which continue in their former Camps, and in the ſame State of Inaction. The Miſunderſtanding betwixt the Emperor and the Electors of Bavaria and Cologn, as well as that betwixt Spain and Portugal, is ſaid to be in a fair way of Accommodation.
